According to reports Shurtleff is named as the man who said it would take $15,000 to get the bill passed. Shurtleff denies the accusation.

Austin, Texas, Aug. 5.—After one of the most spirited debates of the present called session the house this afternoon agreed to defer action on the express shipment liquor regulation bill until Monday and passed to engrossmen the "ten mile" bill, which means prohibition for the cities of Galveston, Austin and Bryan. The indications are that this last named measure will be finally passed tomorrow. During the proceedings charges of "gag rule" and "steam roller tactics" were freely made by the anti-prohibitionists and at times discussion became rather acrimonious. Informal caucuses were the order of the day in the senate end of the capitol building. They resulted in the prohibition senators sending to their opponents in that body a proposition this subject today, for the senate was not in session, but it by no means gives an idea of all the developments in the fight over prohibition. The situation is that the prohibitionists in the house are very eager to secure the passage of all restrictive legislation pending, while those in the senate are equally as anxious to delay action thereon. The purpose is that the house, which is recognized as a prohibition body, may pass these measures and send them up to the senate, recognized as an anti-prohibition body by a bare majority, for the sake of the "moral" effect. For the same reason the anti-prohibitionists in the senate are anxious to expedite action that they may kill the bills, the aforesaid "moral" effect being thus shifted to the house, and their brothers in the house are fighting desperately for delay that their plan may be successful.

Informal caucuses were the order of the day in the senate end of the capitol building. They resulted in the prohibition senators sending to their opponents in that body a proposition to remain in Austin tomorrow and transact business. The other side was willing to agree to this, but sent a flat refusal when the prohibitionists added the condition that no liquor bills be considered.

The result is that doubts are expressed about the ability of the senate to secure a quorum tomorrow.
